CARMEL DID ITSELF PROUD IN TUESDAY'S ELECTION

Carmel is to be congratulated most emphatically on the results of the municipal election last Tuesday. By a most representative vote, two-thirds out of the total of 750 ballots cast, it is sending into the next city council three men who should, and, we believe sincerely, will so conduct the affairs of the city that the confidence placed in them by so many of our citizens will not be betrayed.

The election went as THE CYMBAL believed it would go. We are, in no small measure, much pleased by what little part we ourselves may have played in the outcome. But instead of wasting time throwing bouquets at ourselves, we want most decidedly to heap encomiums on the group of representative citizens who worked so tirelessly and so effectively in the interests of Bechdolt, Heron and Campbell and labored constantly on election day to get voters to the polls.

The campaign work for the three successful candidates reached the heights of intelligent and smooth effectiveness. And it was without bitterness or rancor. There was no mud-slinging, no recriminations, no eleventh-hour tactics to take advantage of an opposing candidate. The battle was clean from beginning to end on the part of the Bechdolt-Campbell-Heron supporters.

Defeat of Bernard Rowntree was a most desirable thing. It has not seemed possible to us during the past three weeks that persons of intelligence and actively interested in the welfare of Carmel could have so definitely striven to return Rowntree to the council on his record in that council. That record was plain and it certainly was not one which recommended that the man who made it should go back to continue it. His defeat proves that a man cannot go haywire on a Carmel city council and make the people take it.

THE LITTLE LIE ABOUT "RIFF RAFF" IS GOING FAST AND MANY PLACES

It's just as we said it would be.

The story appearing in the San Francisco Chronicle two weeks ago, misquoting Perry Newberry and consequently making Carmel appear silly in this capital-removal business, is cropping up in the news columns and on the editorial pages of newspapers all up and down the state.

The last two batches of clippings which have come to THE CYMBAL from our press clipping bureau are fat with the "state legislators are riff-raff" libel. We find facetious comment about Carmel's "difference" in Modesto, Hollister, Watsonville, Sacramento and San Francisco newspapers. The Chronicle, basing its comment on its own absurd news story, says editorially: "Sometimes it seems as if Carmel just likes to be contrary. . . They say they do not want politicians around because politicians are 'riff-raff'."

You see how it goes. First, they printed the lie that Perry Newberry said the legislators are riff-raff, and find it not a bit difficult to jump from that little thought to the wider contention that all of Carmel

To say that you were wearing shorts Thursday morning on Ocean avenue would not distinguish you to within a hundred of the mark. As a wee clue, you were matched up as to sweater and socks, and they were very bright and becoming to your blue eyes . . . but the S & S were not blue. The real clue is the young and handsome man to whom you were smiling and gazing fondly upwards. He was smiling and gazing fondly downwards and together you made a spring vignette which was difficult to pass without this pica-sketch. But presently you sped off and he locked up his car, on which he was leaning, and went to see somebody in a real estate office who was not there and he waited in the doorway, into which he scarcely fitted lengthwise. If you know that the girl into whose blue eyes he looked so tenderly was you . . . well, you may come after the dollar.

If you were this person, bring this paper into the CYMBAL office and we will give you a shiny new dollar or whatever we have in the dollar line.

Due to so many things going on this week-end, the Mission Ranch Club has decided to postpone its Easter Dinner Dance. A date for the dance will be announced later.

ART INSTITUTE GETS OFF TO FINE START

After the meeting, attended by 30 or more persons, last Monday at Kit Whitman's home, the Carmel Art Institute took wings for a most successful future. There is much interest in and genuine enthusiasm for the newly-formed organization, confirmed by a large enrollment throughout the various classes in oil painting, watercolor painting, etching, life drawing, portrait painting, wood carving, and the numerous crafts.

There will be a living model in the studio in the Seven Arts building on Lincoln. The model will be available to students outside of actual classroom hours, as well as during the time when instruction and personal supervision are given. This means that the student may work when and as long as he wants after the regular hours are over.

Mrs. Whitman says, "We are particularly interested in beginners." So, if you come under that heading, don't demur, thinking the galaxy of professionals, or the old-timers too brilliant for you. With the excellent chance to have the people who are at the top in their lines teach you, the opportunity is irresistible.

First class starts promptly, Tuesday, April 19.

Whatever you're interested in

Heron, Campbell And Bechdolt Easy Victors

This is the way the results of last Tuesday's election were recorded in the two Carmel precincts, just about the way we thought the thing would turn out, what with our efforts and the wisdom of the voters:

	Precinct A (Carmel Garage)	Precinct B (Fire Station)	Total
Bernard Rowntree	158	88	247
Ernest W. Aldrich	73	76	149
Frederick R. Bechdolt	291	169	460
Gordon Campbell	315	197	512
Herbert Heron	347	182	529
Edward L. Taylor	92	82	174

The failure of Bernard Rowntree to get a larger vote was the surprise of the election. There were several guesses floating about all through Monday that Rowntree would run up close to Bechdolt and possibly, beat him. We didn't feel that way, but we did think Rowntree would poll a higher vote than we did. However, the result substantiates our contention that a man cannot make such a record as Rowntree made on the city council and expect the people of Carmel to put him back to continue his policy.

An analysis of the vote shows that out of a total of 742 persons who cast their ballots 500, or two-thirds, voted for the so-called "ticket," Heron, Campbell and Bechdolt.

The new council will organize at a special meeting, called for the purpose on April 18, next Monday. Tradition elects that the candidate receiving the highest vote is complimented by the council by being elected mayor by his fellow councilmen. This means, if the unwritten rule is followed out, that it will be Mayor Herbert Heron for the next two years.

The successful candidates had the following to say to the people through the columns of THE CYMBAL:

FREDERICK R. BECHDOLT: I want particularly to thank the 742 voters who showed their civic duty in getting out to vote which made possible the election of Bert Heron, Gordie Campbell and myself. We did stand together in this fight because we do stand together on certain fundamental principles of government in Carmel. Principally we stood for open, frank and candid conduct of municipal affairs in council. We believe that through this single principle we cannot go far wrong in serving the people. Of course I am gratified that Carmel has seen fit to place this responsibility on me.

GORDON CAMPBELL: I have been very happy over the results of the election. I want to thank all my friends and all who worked so hard and successfully in the interests of Mr. Bechdolt, Mr. Heron and myself. I am glad that there was no bitterness displayed in the campaign and I am sure that we will be able to work effectively and in harmony with the two hold-over members of the council, Everett Smith and Clara Kellogg.

HERBERT HERON: The confidence which so many of the voters felt in the clearness of our purpose is deeply gratifying, and I shall do everything in my power to work faithfully and in good will with the other members of the council for Carmel and its residents.

Be Sure You're Able to Vote

There will be a Sunset School district election on June 3 and in order to vote it will be necessary for you to see that your name is on the register not later than Saturday, April 23. Of course, if you are now a voter, and have not moved out of the precinct from which you registered, you needn't bother. But if you have moved you'd better get yourself checked up—that is, if you want to have a voice in selecting a member of the school board. There are three members and one term ends each year. This year it is that of A. G. E. Hanke. He has not said that he will be a candidate to succeed himself, nor has he said he wouldn't. He just hasn't made up his mind.

Dog Show Big Success

Sponsored by the Pacific Grove Girls' Kennel Club, the Dog Show held Saturday afternoon on Holman's roof drew several hundred persons. There were a number of Carmel dogs among the 58 entries and every owner was under 15 years of age.

W. R. Holman, owner of the store, was responsible for the fine benching facilities and the show ring. W. J. West of the Del Monte Kennels was judge and Mrs. H. D. Maybury was ring steward. Prizes were donated by the Del Monte Kennel Club, Mrs. Leona Palmer, Mrs. Louis Quateroni, Del Monte Kennels, Monterey Pet Shop, Tioga Food Company, Barry Brothers, Pacific Grove Girls' Kennel Club, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Maybury, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. West, Albers Milling Company and W. R. Holman.

The show was more of a success than the girls hoped for, and next year they will have ribbons, more trophies and more prizes for the trick dogs and obedience tests.

says the legislators are riff-raff.
It may be highly complimentary to Perry for the newspaper editors throughout the state to take whatever he says as the opinion of Carmel, but it would undoubtedly be more pleasing to him if in the first place they would find out exactly what he did say.
But the thing is growing and it will grow. We repeat our opinion that it will continue to be one of the nastiest little thorns in S. F. B. Morse's side during his battle to move the capital from Sacramento to Monterey.

CARMEL CHESS PLAYERS GO TO TRIM SALINAS

The Carmel Chess Club is on the ever-increasing popularity list and now meets with such enthusiasts as John Barton (who is president, by the way), Tom Work, By Ford, Paul Whitman, Charles Frisbie, G. de Packh, Bud Crossman, Alex Gibson, and plenty of others. Besides there are the women.

In fact, there's no getting out of having a tournament. Starting next Tuesday night, April 19, a team will go over to Salinas to trim whatever comes in the way of good playing in Salinas. And from then on, it's Watsonville and everybody until the San Francisco pay-off some weeks hence.

The Chess Club would like to have YOU if you like catching kings in corners.

Dr. and Mrs. Sidney K. Smith of Berkeley and their two children, Kinnear and Susy, are spending the week in their Carmel home at Twelfth and Camino Real.

POET & PEASANT

by FRANCIS L. LLOYD

Bechdolt, Heron and Campbell elected! So perhaps Carmel will be safe a few more years from encroaching street lights and neon signs. Vindicated at least are the Old Timers and an established idea of what Carmel is, or was, or might in wishful thinking, be. The wide margin by which these three were elected over their political rivals emphasizes Carmel's attitude. Nothing less than a torchlight parade would fittingly inaugurate the new city council.

Comments upon THE CYMBAL's varied galaxy of columnists usually brings high praise for the best of Lynda's writings for Herr W.K.B. Personally, I am susceptible to the witchery of Libby in some of her more sexational paragraphs.

If you want to create a sensation, and perhaps end up in jail, the sea otter herd down the coast will provide the key. The formula is a fast, seagoing speedboat, in which to dash in under the watching eyes of the representatives of the august Fish and Game Commission and snare several of the surf-loving animals whose pelts might well repay in cash the effort. Any number of California sea otter pelts have found their way into the channels of trade in recent years, despite the F. and G. worthy gentlemen.

The Lovejoys (friends of Jack Calvin, of recent years in Sitka) return to these low latitudes with tales of Alaska that make many of us hungry for the slow-moving pace of tiny Sitka on its island in the north Pacific. From reports, beyond the city limits rises the northern forest, replete with bears and Indians. Nor do the Indians confine their activities to the suburban areas, but about half the town is Indian, leaving a few hundred whites, preponderantly solemn Nordics, the balance of the population.

Dick Masten has a super-trailer, in that it resembles nothing so much as a flat car fresh off the railroad. With sundry grunts and groans it becomes something like a barn in which one may sleep. Preeminently, it is a great carrier of freight, which Masten has been busy toting hither and yon, between Carmel and Sausalito, his two homes.

A fugitive again from the newspaper chain gang, the writer has been trying to "turn the clock around", rise at more usual hours, bed down earlier. What with a little entertainment and a chance to talk of evenings, however, the hours have got worse, to the point that a Guild for non-working newspapermen, with better hours as an object, might be highly desirable.

Casual remark by a visitor: Carmel with a few less pine trees will look like Pacific Grove.

Now, wouldn't that be nice!

For one dollar we'll deliver The Cymbal to you by mail anywhere in the far-flung domain of the United States for a whole year. For Two Dollars we'll send it to Czechoslovakia or Greenland or the French Riviera.

Budapest String Quartet To Play Here Tomorrow Night at Sunset Auditorium

Tomorrow evening, April 16, the Budapest String Quartet will bring to a close the 1937-1938 season of the Carmel Music Society.

The popularity of this quartet may be partly accounted for by a marked increase in the demand for chamber music but in the minds of many who have heard the Budapest there is a strong suspicion that things may be the other way round and that this quartet has had a great deal to do with the revival of interest in chamber music. But beyond any mere suspicion is the fact that wherever the Budapest play a return concert they play to a sold-out house.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lloyd are back in Carmel for a few weeks. During the past year Lloyd has been sports editor of the Santa Cruz Evening News and assistant editor of the Watsonville Morning Sun.

But the reasons for their popularity are perhaps not of such general interest as the popularity itself. Their success in the Eastern states, in Europe, and in all parts of the world is now being duplicated in California. In Pasadena, following two concerts in Los Angeles, every seat in the house was sold out and people were turned away from the box office. The same thing is happening in San Francisco.

For the Carmel concert there is a good chance that they will play a Sibelius quartet. They have just added it to their repertoire and it has been received with tremendous enthusiasm.

The Cymbal has more readers per copy than the New York Times; three-fourths as many as The New Yorker.

Thirty-three years ago Mary L. Atwood came out from the East to visit Carmel. We were a slight village then but Miss Atwood liked us. So she came again, just 20 years ago. And she still liked us. This winter she visited us again and says if it weren't for her home back in Waupun, Wisconsin, she just wouldn't leave us at all. Because, after staying here with us at the Carmel Inn these last six months, the time has come when the storm windows at Waupun must come down and the spring plants tended to and—well—it's time she got back home to see after everything—but, "Oh," Miss Atwood says, "it's hard to leave Carmel."

Visiting Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence Knox this week are Marna and Marilyn Reagor of Piedmont, the daughters of the Rev. W. P. Reagor.

Carmel Players Give 3 Skits Monday Night

Don't forget the general meeting of the Carmel Players to be held this Monday night in the Green Room on Casanova at 8 o'clock. Three skits will be presented following a short business meeting. The meeting is for members only due to the limited space.

Changing the subject, the April 28, 29, 30 and May 1 play, "Three Men on a Horse," is shaping up nicely. The amusing story of the naive young chap, a writer of greeting cards, who gets mixed up with a gang of race track touts, and the ensuing complications, will delight Carmel audiences as the play has delighted many other audiences.

McGaw-Knox Not To Leave Us Completely

Carmel is not going to lose Baldwin McGaw and Emma Knox. They're coming back to us every winter and will continue to read such outstanding plays as the seventeen they've done here over the last two years.

Spotted while in the south last week, they were followed by Clark Gettz, New York manager on the look-out for talent, and were followed to San Francisco where they signed a five year contract to go on tour giving play readings in numerous cities from coast to coast, up to and including New York.

Saturday night saw their farewell performance in Carmel. The play was the popular "Shadow and Substance" by Paul Vincent Carroll, a play enjoying an extended New York run at the present time. Before a large and wholly appreciative audience, the McGaws made of the two dominant characters, Canon Skerritt and his miracle-minded maid, Brigid, a frame which the other characters of the play stepped into and out of with agile reality. Though there only in voice, they, too, seemed present to the eye quickened with imagination and ably prompted by Baldwin McGaw and Emma Knox, whose achievement was enviable.

To the many admirers of this popular couple, who may have been incorrectly advised as to their permanent departure from Carmel, let us hasten to correct this misapprehension to read, "lent out to America," and remember that they will be with us again in the winter.

BRIDAL COUPLE CUTS CAKE IN CARMEL TEA ROOM

A wedding cake was cut at Alpine Inn for the first time since Bess Grainger bought the decorative tea room a few weeks ago. The occasion was in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph M. Jacobsen who were married Sunday morning and celebrated immediately after with families and friends at dinner in the inn on Dolores street.

Wild blue lupin and white star bells blossomed from wall vases and bowls. Blue candles and flower sprays graced the bride's table.

The Jacobsens are from Sacramento and Ross and are dividing their honeymoon between Carmel's pine trees and Yosemite's snow.

FINDS THESE CHILDREN HAVE MORE COURTESY THAN OLDER ONES

Dear CYMBAL:

Again, seeing and hearing things worth while. I took my two little grandnieces across the bay from Berkeley, to meet my daughter, who was taking them to the Children's Concert of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. I suggested that I also go, but my daughter said all seats were sold, but that I could get standing room. So I went and stood up at rear of the dress circle. There before me were gathered an audience of more than 3000 children, ranging in age from five to fifteen years—average age about twelve years.

The orchestra was the full San Francisco Symphony Orchestra and I was delighted to see its reception by these children. They did credit to themselves. No audience of grown ups could have been better behaved—not arustle or murmur during the different renditions, and instructive talks by the orchestra leader, Rudolph Ganz. How different was their behavior to the ones you wrote about in THE CYMBAL several weeks ago. The contrast was so marked that it brings forth this letter.

SADE GETS WORLD TRADE IN NEW RESTAURANT

Sadé has not only pleased Carmel, the Peninsula, Salinas, San Jose and San Francisco, but also London. No, all of London did not drop in for dinner at the little cottage with the red curtains on Ocean avenue. But a most acceptable representative did—Mrs. F. L. Well, so it is. First thing you know, they'll have to get Colin to help out on Saturday nights. Sadé and Milt feel as though there's been a convention in town for a week.

LILTS FROM LILLICO

Sunday we drove down the coast to view the 80 head of sea otters which are floating about in a cove some 17 miles south of Carmel. When first looking down from the high cliff, the otters appear to be kelp, but through field glasses one can see that they are from four to five feet long. The worst part of them is that they swim and float on their backs and one can't help but wonder how they know where they are going. Perhaps they don't care where they are going but are more interested in seeing where they have been. Their large eyes pop miraculously out of their dark faces and they look like a lot of tired business men taking a nap. When they are hungry they dive down and grasp an abalone, bring it to the top, and there they float, holding the abalone on their stomachs with two hands (more or less). When the spirit moves them they take the food to their faces and take a quick nibble, then rest it again on the stomach and wait for the spirit to move them to another nibble. They just float on, kick their feet when they wish to cover some distance, and altogether they give one the jitters. Like you, I didn't believe the story until I went down to look for myself (not that I am an otter), and now I don't know whether I have really seen them or whether I'm having hallucinations!!

Years ago when the otters' fur was something one could sell without having to lie about it, the Russians came over and caught them. They were so tame (the otter, not the Russians) that the bearded men would go right up to them and tap them lightly on the tete with a sledge hammer or something. This would finish the otter, as would it most things. One can't help but think that the poor otter probably gazed into the bearded face of his assailant, thought it was merely another one of the otter tribe and so dismissed the situation.

Have you ever put the last finishing touches on your loveliness with a spot of perfume on the ear or the eyebrow and then spilled the bottle? Or even to misuse your sense of odor and just naturally put too much of the charming scent upon your body and realize after you are saturated with it that it is not the effect which you have desired. Immediately you run out into the open air, hoping that a wind is blowing and that it will blow through your entire body and soul. Nothing is worse than too much of any perfume except perhaps a chemical laboratory, but we won't go into that. You stand in the wind, or the sun, or anything that happens to be an element at the time, then when your nostrils meet the first light of fresh air, you hope that the people about you will smell only the fresh air, too. The only thing to do in a case like this is either to tell the truth, stay home, or else pretend that it is someone else in the group and haunt them all evening, so that you may keep the fragrance by their side until they too are the essence of chemistry.

RESURRECTION

Long long ago I made for myself the habit of taking her with me where I went. She was the best companion I have ever known. To begin with, she was amusing; her rough jaunty little hands were somehow funny; and the slight jocular up-hitch of one shoulder and her always half secret smile. But especially, her laughter. My, how she would laugh! She would double up, her hands curled in against her belly, and the tears sporting down her cheeks. I think an animal would like to laugh that way if it only could.

Then, too, she had a way of opening up, of throwing wide doors and windows all about her so that things could come in and go out, spiritual things. I have talked with people who spent a few minutes with her years ago and they all remember some specific bit of the experience; a sentence she said, or some gesture. She is quoted, as great poets are. Because she could suddenly open up one of her case-ments and invisible songsters would come and sit on the sill and sing. Then you heard the song, distilled, in her magic artlessness.

She was especial fun when automobile riding. Years ago, when there were only horses at Fernside, she loved a buggy ride. But an automobile was a miracle to her. She never learned to work one herself, so she was content with Father's driving and even with mine. Oh, more than content, because I have to confess there is an element of imagination in the way both my father and I manipulate a motor vehicle. She used to say that if I ever did have an accident it would be a good thoroughgoing accident and she was right. But that didn't worry her. If someone asked her to go riding she'd wipe the flour off her hands and...

Oh, how that scene comes back to me now!

She would be standing by the kitchen table, rolling out a pie crust, let us say. A great heap of morning work all around her; mending on the sewing machine; ironing in the clothesbasket. Then Father's step, a little faster, more eager than usual, would come along the shed walkway outside and I can just see the hopeful gleam come into her eyes. Pop; the door opens. Well, Ma, if you want to drive over to Schoodac with me, get your bonnet on. Be ready in five minutes.

Bang goes the rolling pin: off, the apron, to hang on its peg over the woodbox; dash of cold water from the pump to get the flour off her hands; swipe at the roller towel on the shed door. The worn old floor boards would creak under her haste. From the sitting-room closet, her coat and hat; a little struggle while the crooked arm wrestled with the sleeve-hole. In three minutes she had dressed, put up some eggs and a sack of potatoes for Aunt Nell and was patiently, proudly, happily settled in her corner of the front seat—where as like as not she'd wait for half an hour. I can't remember that she ever refused a ride for but one thing—that she had bread in the oven. But Father invariably found, then, that he didn't have to get started in five minutes.

Of course she loved best to ride with Father—she loved Father best.

But I was next-best, because I had the big open roadsters. I shall never forget the first time I took her out in one of the great-engined things. There was an open stretch just beyond Concord—we don't have many in New Hampshire—and I went out on it and opened her wide open. The mirrors were so that I could catch my Mother's face. Speedometer reading 72... 82... 90... 98... 101. Her smile grew, that quiet way. I think when we reached the top of the speed I have never seen so pleased an expression on a human face. She didn't say a word. But at supper when she was quietly eating her boiled-cider-applesauce, using her spoon in that odd rather awkward way of country people; after all the children had been allowed their say about the school-day and Father his farm day speaking, she said in a still voice that was round to bursting with boastfulness, Pa, I went over a hundred miles an hour today.

Well, I have wandered somewhat from my theme. As I started saying, I made the habit of having her with me, unrepresent, invisible, near. At the theatre, surrounded by my gay and fashionably dressed friends, I would suddenly be seeing the play with her own eyes. How she would love it, I would think; and promptly everyone else was away from there and she and I were having a good old-fashioned laugh at some ribald situation or brushing away an unabashed tear. I have had an escort turn and look at me peculiarly as if I had gone quite from my mind, as indeed I had.

So it came about that when she did go out beyond the summonance of her physical presence, I alone did not lose her. The plain habit I had made had grown. And today, even as then, when I have been somewhere especial, have done some bright and beautiful thing, she has been and seen and done it with me. Now, as ago, when I come home at night from such experience, I sit down and write her about it. Once or twice I have even taken an envelope, and with the forgetfulness of joy upon me, have made her name again: Albyn Sargent, Hen-niker, New Hampshire.

And now, even as then, this plain ordinary habit which I have formed brings me for a moment—moment too fragile, too precious to even wish to hold—her real presence, created again out of the infinite plasms of the mind.

Thus she came to us the other night before the fire at Susan Porter's place.

It had, in fact, been quite importantly her own kind of day. Probably Janie doesn't know yet that from the moment we crossed the Carmel River she was with us. Did she crowd you, Janie? Did you hear her foolish familiar comment: Now, what have they done to those cows' dewlaps? and, How do you suppose those nuns can stay shut up from such a lovely world? And seven-year-old Kenny Otto, perched up there where the groceries belong, did you mind that other Mother going?

At the Grimes Place, at the entrance of the Palo Colorado, there are three little girls quite like any three of her own, with a pet lamb they feed from a bottle, and baby turkeys chattering about under the dragging wings of the turkey hen and nests with setting hens hidden and all the dear, familiar things. There is a calf like your own Fawn, Mother. Do you remember how Fawn would follow you about, nudging your bottom every now and then just to let you know she was there? Here is Mrs. Grimes in her garden, pulling up the winter things to make way for life. The same kind of garden as yours and the same time to work in it—Sunday afternoon and a few stolen hours during the week. And the lovingkindness. There, too, are the old farm implements standing about and the great work horses munching artichokes in the barnyard for their Sabbath. There is the peace, the splendor, the rich Seventh Day's grace. Neighbors from up-canyon drop in. Ourselves, outsiders. And the bounty of country-life, that we should come away with a great sack of 'chokes; that no one ever goes away empty from the land.

Yes, she was with us, quietly taking in everything. So different on this western ranch, yet so familiar; the same, yet not. The log house, now. She must remember to tell Pa about that house; how stout and roomy. And think of having all those slips to take home; and what do your poor cattle eat during the dry summer, Mr. Grimes, and when do you wean your calves? Strange to have the sea at your door. I am a little afraid of the sea; that unfamiliar element. Now the mountains...

I saw her smile of pleasure grow. I saw the grimy small fingers curl around a precious geranium slip. I felt a breath.

It is Easter time and in the hush of this Good Friday morning, surely I may speak of so good a thing.

We had had supper at Susan's table and now the sun was way gone. Over in a corner of the room the brash exigent beauty of a seven-year-old boy's face had yielded, in sleep, to the cherubim. The kerosene lamps were snug little ladies in their corners, intruding only to make their pleasant lucence within this pleasant place. On either side of me, for I sat on the little bench directly afront the fire, two faces; Susan and Janie. Two faces so fine that the happening came.

Somewhere in the most utter distance a gate creaks. But old St. Peter, seeing it is only she, winks and lets her pass. Perhaps God, looking about for someone to sew a button on, misses her and goes calling through his house, as Father was wont to do, Where's your mother, girls? Where's your mother? At any rate, there in Susan's house a breath of felicity came through the window from the great sea underneath, and the light of Susan's kerosene lamps fell on three faces near me.

JIMMIE WILLIAMS SELECTS HIS BRAND OF CANDY

Jimmie Williams has discovered how sweet a sweet tooth really can be. Keeping the restaurant business hitting on all twenty-four cylinders would seem to leave little time for observation on Jimmie's part but somehow he got time to discover how much everybody likes good candy. Of course, there always has been good candy at Williams' restaurant—but then, there's better than good—it's Hairston's Home-made Candy. And from now on it is all that Jimmie is going to carry at his place. (See page in THE CYMBAL.

Hairston has made candy for Whitman's, Pig 'n Whistle, Nunnally's, Pettifil's, etc. And when you taste the whipped cream fudge, for instance, you'll know what a smart fellow Jimmie Williams is for getting that kind of candy for you.

"The wittles is up!"

Sometimes when it seems as if I had done nothing for endless eons but clear away one meal only just in time to start another, I agree with William Beebe who, in the Hotel Del Monte's book of "Famous Recipes," said frankly: "I hate the thought of cooking." What a man! And being a man he needn't give it another thought. But apparently he isn't specially interested even in eating either except one meal a day for he goes on to say: "I would like a tabloid for breakfast and lunch, and then a large, drawn-out dinner, beautifully cooked and served, of many courses, with real conversation, but each dish a surprise. In Tibet I eat with gusto rancid butter tea, in Borneo I am grateful for bowls of bracken greens, in between anything is acceptable, providing I do not have to think or order it. I have eaten, I think, everything edible from monkey and rattlesnake to electric eel and crow. 'Long pig' I have not as yet tasted."

A good stomach is the best sauce.
Proverbs.

Speaking of dairies (yes, I was, last week) I hope nobody thinks I prefer the old-fashioned kind of my distant youth. Not for a minute! I think the new-style dairy, right handy on a main street with shiny soda fountain, shiny booths, shiny windows through which to watch the traffic endlessly passing, and a whole lot of good things to eat and drink never dreamed of by the cow-barn dairies of old, is one of the pleasantest manifestations of the march of progress. And right here in Carmel we have four swell dairies, all of them up to date, all of them with the smiling service that makes the things they sell taste better.

Let's take them in alphabetical order as you enter town. Swooping down the hill, trying to keep your eyes on the road but finding them glued fascinated to the steep wall of blue ocean which unaccountably grows flatter as you approach the bottom, you have just a short block in which to slow down for the stop sign at Mission. And there, on the same side of the street, on the opposite corner, are the big arch-topped windows of the Carmel Dairy. If you've come a long hot drive it looks like a fine place to stop. The parking possibilities are usually pretty slim and you're lucky if you can find a hole to slip into. But that applies to the other three also so we won't discriminate on that score! In the Carmel Dairy, added to high class food and service, you have Jo Mora's murals glorifying "the friendly cow all red and white," the most delightful decoration a dairy could hope to have. It also overlooks our neat little civic park, our one breath of metropolitan atmosphere, and the flow of tourists up and down the avenue.

Continuing your alphabetical amble you must go west a couple of blocks, turn left at Dolores and thread your way through a block also well filled with cars to Seventh. There, at the northeast corner, is the Del Monte Dairy; it has good food, good service and a more complete hot lunch menu than the others. As for decorations, the Spanish bullfight poster and the list of different ice creams at your command will keep you pleasantly occupied. At least, I find that when I've at last decided which flavor to order I haven't enough time left to figure out more than a few of the Spanish words on the poster!

From there you go round the corner heading east and at San Carlos, stay on the same side turning north again. A few doors from Ocean avenue you come to the McDonald Dairy—good food, good service, good seat to watch the street and sidewalk traffic. And if you happen to be lucky you might see little Michael of the big brown eyes and charming smile and perhaps also his little sizzler Patsy.

Next your design for dairying leads you to our roaring main stem where you turn right, proceed one block east to Mission, and there as you slow down for the stop sign you see, just as you saw the Carmel Dairy on your way in, across the street, Walt Pilot's place. Like the others, it offers you good food, good service and a continuous performance through its windows. Walt's is a little more stream-lined in its furnishings with yellow leather and chromium seats and it has some fancy extras, such as a delicious ice-cream-cake-roll and a super-delicious nut roll. In the way of refreshments, this is your "Last Chance" on the way out and it should give you a pleasant taste of Carmel to carry away with you.

As I said, we have four swell dairies in Carmel...

I'D RATHER BE FAT

I'm goofy from hearing "My dear, my dear,
How do you do it from year to year?
You're slim as a sliver; your clothes fit slick;
And yet you don't diet! As I said to Dick,
'It's really annoying the way that girl eats
The yummiest sundaes and all kinds of sweets,
And butter, potatoes and starches galore
And still she's as beautifully slim as before...'
It isn't your nature, I guess, to be fat,
There's lots to be thankful for, dearie, in that...
Oh, must you be going? I'd hoped in a way
You'd tell how you do it... You're kidding me, Kay!
A raw egg in milk? Six ounces of cream?
Cod liver capsules three times in between!
Why how do you stand it? That early to bed?
Well, thanks very much... but I'd rather be dead! "

—DOROTHY E. BOYLE

(Reprinted by permission of Pictorial Review)

And with all the luscious temptations being offered by the dairies—so would I!

Legion Auxiliary Initiates New Members

Initiation of new members into the American Legion Auxiliary on Tuesday night at the Legion Hall welcomed into the organization the following: June Delight Canoles, Anna Clark, Jess Elliot, Dorothy Imelman, Dora McCarthy, Ethel Robison, Teresa Thompson and Caroline Topping.

Frances Price from San Jose, who is district president of the Auxiliary, was the guest speaker. She spoke on the subject, "Aims and Purposes of the American Legion."

About 60 were present, including the Carmel unit and guests from Watsonville, Salinas and Monterey. Helen Storm was in charge of the initiation. A buffet supper was served in the lounge after the ceremonies.

Especially gratifying to the Auxiliary is the fact that the local unit, although but three years old, has already attained a roster of 35. Officers of the Carmel unit are: president, Gladys R. Johnston; first vice-president, Isabel Cotten; second vice-president, Ann Ewig; secretary, Rene Moore; treasurer, Mrs. Rush Wallace.

The executive board consists of Louise Schroeder, Hazel McIndoe and Verne Regan.

DE PACKH SETS ADAMS' GEMS IN CARVED WOOD SETTINGS

When imagination flourishes and begets artistic enterprises you can be sure it's in Carmel.

Lately, Floyd Adams put into action his unique idea of creating costume jewelry designed and adapted to California gems. So now, under the pine trees up along Torres street, the lapidary cuts and polishes such star dust as myrrikite, sardonyx, poppy stones, moonstones, kinradite, verasite, bloodstones, jasper, lapis, opals, cinnabar, rose quartz and spercolite.

This Carmel venture includes another artist, G. de Packh, whose medium is wood. He designs and carves wood settings for the gems. Then he does the mechanical work of making the ornaments into pins, buttons, bracelets, earrings, clips, and other things.

Mrs. de Packh spells and remembers the names of the gems. But guessing the color and lustre of spercolite is now up to you.

MRS. WILLIS G. WHITE TALKS ON MEXICAN OIL SITUATION

Due to the absence of the speaker, Mrs. Willis G. White, chairman, spoke informally before the current events section of the Carmel Woman's Club at the meeting Wednesday morning.

She spoke of the oil situation in Mexico, and, using maps for reference, she made situations in Europe comprehensible. In speaking of Spain, Mrs. White read an account of the Loyalist retreat by Ernest Hemingway, published in Sunday's San Francisco Chronicle. The products and physical aspects of Japan were next described, and Mrs. White concluded her talk with a discussion of the Sino-Japanese crisis.

CARMEL CAPERS

We have returned to Carmel from places less favored more times than we would care to count. Yet there is always a thrill as one reaches the top of the hill (just past the stop sign where it is so very difficult to stop) and sees Carmel scattered among green trees in the distance. The heart seems to soar and there is an impulse (barely held in check by a battered conscience and thoughts of our fine, public-spirited police force) to press the throttle to the floorboards and plunge madly down Ocean avenue to the long-missed, silvery reaches of sea which lie so invitingly at its foot.

Dorothy Orcutt very frankly admits her preference for the Riviera. "More excitement" she says.

Nevertheless, she and Herman Hotanus (as fine a specimen of Aryan manhood as you or I, or Mr. Hitler, or even Dorothy could find any place) were quite happily defying old Sol with their blonde beauty on the Carmel beach last week-end.

Sad to say, they will not long brighten the local horizon as they are sailing for Europe, Dorothy on the Empress of Australia, and Herman on a French boat (with an American automobile) on the 29th of April.

Though we have not infrequently retired at five a.m., last Friday was one of the rare occasions on which we have arisen at that uncouth hour. And all for the purpose of wrapping CYMBALS (with so very much more of love than efficiency) for all the contented little subscribers on mail route "south 7."

In the course of our labors, we came across some familiar names: Mr. J. Biddle Dorcy . . . H'ya, Biddle, and how did you like your CYMBAL all covered with paste and wrapped awry, with Oh so much love, and so very little skill?

Mr. James Doud, with the address slanting upward, surely you detected our fine patrician hand in the very un-chic aspect of your paper.

And why do we, indolent little slut that we are, bestir ourselves from our warm and humid couch at 5 a.m. to wrap CYMBALS? Work for work's sake was never one of our doctrines, even our unquestionable devotion to W. K. Bassett would be insufficient to rouse us at such an hour.

We look about the office and wonder at our Spartan devotion to labor. Maybe it has some bearing on the fact that the "Carmel Press and Cymbal" is surely the only newspaper office where a piece of ivy grows right through a hole in the roof and down the wall past the impressive linotype machine. . . . A lone piece of ivy, still very young, very green, and quite untrammelled.

Those out-door tables at De

Loe's give quite a charming and Continental aspect to our village street. People who come to Carmel are frequently weary of interiors, gilt mirrors, and self-conscious decors. Why not more places where one can eat and drink and still remain aware of the vast display of Nature and the sun above.

Jack Oakie is leading a very quiet life these last few weeks at the Pebble Beach Lodge, losing weight and gaining health. Seems he has to get rid of his tummy which is too big for Hollywood ideals and movie cameras.

Quite an Amazonian invasion of Mills girls this last week-end. Among them, our unerring eye detected Jeanie Crossman, who was bouncing about the beach with the rest and seemed to be thoroughly enjoying Carmel after having spent most of her week-ends at winter sports.

Hub Powers arrived in Whitney's last Monday night looking a bit salty and very weary. He had just made the trip from Newport Beach (which is about 20 miles south of San Pedro) to Monterey in the very sensational time of 19 hours, thus beating even his own record in the "Sea Biscuit" of last Spring.

The lighthouse-keeper's daughter (which sounds like the title of an old song) says she sighted him off of Point Sur at about eight o'clock Monday morning "and he certainly was going!"

P-T.A. To Hear Recreation Talk

The Parent-Teacher Association will meet this Tuesday, April 19, at 3 p.m. in the Sunset School library to hear the final program in the series devoted to Recreation. In charge of the program will be Miss Clara Kellogg and the general topic will be "Looking Ahead." Different aspects of the subject will be briefly presented as follows: "Looking Ahead for Boy Scouts" by Walter Kellogg, "Looking Ahead for Girl Scouts" by Miss Edith Tweedy, "Tennis and the Future" by Mrs. Ruth Perry, "What of the Lagoon?" by Mrs. Paul Flanders, "Looking Ahead in Music" by Dene Denny and "Possibilities of the Forest Theater" by Herbert Heron.

Preceding the program, the nominating committee will give its report and officers for the following year will be elected.

As usual, a competent woman will take care of the younger children in the kindergarten room and two playground directors will remain on duty after school to supervise the older children.

If you know something you think The Cymbal ought to know, telephone Carmel 77 and tell us.

Ruby Loving Bride At Community Church

Ruby Alice Loving and Glen Adrian McEntire were married Sunday at 12 noon in the Community Church, with the Rev. Homer S. Bodley, Jr., officiating. The church was attractively decorated with white flowers and ferns. The bride, who was given away by her brother, Lunsford Loving, from Alameda, wore a white satin gown with a silk net veil and carried white carnations.

She was attended by Vera E. Burnette, maid of honor, whose dress was yellow organdy, and Dorothy Machado, bridesmaid, gowned in blue net over silk. Both attendants carried old-fashioned bouquets and wore flowers in their hair.

Clarence Castro from Carmel Highlands was best man for the groom.

Mrs. Alice Layton, the mother of the bride, wore a black net afternoon dress and a corsage of carnations.

Following the wedding a reception for about 35 friends and relatives was held at the home of the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. McEntire.

The couple will make their home in Carmel following a short honeymoon. The bride has lived here since she was very young and is a graduate of Sunset School and Monterey Union High School. The groom, also a graduate of Monterey, has lived here for 15 years, and is employed by the Greyhound Taxi Service.

Among the out-of-town guests at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Spears of San Leandro, Mr. and Mrs. Lunsford Loving of Alameda, Mrs. Lucy Nelson of Minneapolis, Mrs. Edith Barnwell and son from Oakland and Mrs. T. Hocking and son, Earl, from Oakland.

Dr. W. H. McCabe Opens Offices

We went into a large and sunny new office in the El Paseo building last Monday and saw a bouquet of garden flowers as though maybe somebody had just picked it, fresh and sweet-smelling. We sat comfortably in a deep chair and read a current magazine in all its pristine freshness. No smudge, no lipped leaves, no torn cover.

But, as it always is in a dentist's office, we didn't want to see the dentist at all. We could have waited indefinitely but he came in anyway—Bill McCabe, who practiced dentistry in Oakland for years but who is here now in Carmel with us to stay and fix people's teeth for them, instead of just visiting us the way he's been doing since Elizabeth Strong showed him how to paint pictures about—oh—well, an awfully long time ago.

Bill and Charlie Sayers get together to paint or carve wood or etch or sculpt or talk about old times. Or Bill tells Charlie about how he hunted jaguars in Mexico last winter or how he nearly broke his neck ski jumping (before he got to be so good at it, of course).

But he quickly gets around to me—and homicide with fine drills—while I'm trying to think how that story would have ended if I'd finished it before Bill got me. He's really a swell dentist—oh—if it were only not I who's finding it out.

This Globetrotter Writes Own Story

This is about a guy who says he's the champion globe-trotter of the United States, and well he may be for all we know, because he appeared in the doorway of our sun-drenched sanctum with a sun-peeled nose and hair which only the sun could have bleached that way.

His name, he told us, is Norman Alexander, and he calls himself, in the script he offered for our edification and amazement, a "25-year-old New York youth." And before we could glance at more than half a page of his hand-written autobiography, he naively presented us with some colored postcards of the site of some exposition which, he said, was already started as to buildings on some sort of an island up in San Francisco bay. The Sun Tower particularly appealed to him as something we should cast our to-be ravished eyes upon.

Now properly to deal with young Alexander, whose enthusiasm for life gets our sparsing hair askew in wonder, we should present to you what he presented to us. We consider it a masterpiece of something. We respectfully leave it to you:

Norman Alexander, 25 year-old New York youth, who claims to be the Champion Globetrotter of the U.S. returned to Carmel on Wednesday, after making a trip up to San Francisco and back. While there he attended the Preview Opening of the Golden Gate International Exposition. On Sunday April 3rd the general public was admitted for the first time on "Treasure Island." According to claims made by Exposition officials they have already completed 80% of the building program.

Young Alexander has been making a survey of the 48 states in preparation for a Tourist Guide Book. Since his first trip in 1933 to the World's Fair in Chicago he has attended every Exposition in the country.

In the past 5 years he has visited 150 important places of interest including all of the country's 24 National Parks and 26 national monuments, as well as the 48 state capitals.

His most exciting experiences included an exploration at the bottom of the Grand Canyon, and a journey across the Rincon Mountains of Arizona, on which trip he was lost for 3 days and was without food or water.

On his most recent adventure he walked 50 miles in a single day covering the entire distance across California's Painted Desert, located 25 miles west of the Salton Sea.

Within the next few weeks he plans on visiting Richard Halliburton, his favorite writer on Travel books, who has built a new home at Laguna Beach.

In the near future Alexander said he intended visiting the Hawaiian Island, Mexico City, and Havana, Cuba. While on these trips he hopes to get material for a novel to be titled: "The Road to Paradise."

Little Loeta Overhulse, weighing seven and three-quarter pounds, arrived on April 8 just on the right day to help celebrate the birthday of her great-great grandmother, Mrs. Belle Alderson. Loeta is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Overhulse. Before her marriage Mrs. Overhulse's name was Vermoyne Holcomb.

Bob and Jane Payne from San Jose were in Carmel for a short time this week.

DOG DAYS—AND NIGHTS

Edited by JESSIE JOAN BROWN

The sudden change that has come over the little boy and girl dogs is not really due to Spring Fever. Nor is the old sulphur and molasses formula the remedy to cure it. Have you forgotten that it is Easter Bunny time? That is why there is so much dishwashing, and yard raking and wood-carrying going on. (The Easter Bunny uses Santa Claus' method of sending out scouts). Old Brother Rabbit is pretty popular just now with the younger generation who have visions of chocolate chickens and baskets and brightly colored eggs dancing in their heads.

A touching story of unrequited love is that of the Dark Gentleman who daily haunts Vagabond House for a glimpse of the fair Nani Ball. But she will have none of him. The little black Cocker just sits outside and watches for a glimpse of her. He follows her master, Alfred Ball, all over the village pleading with him to try to soften the stony heart of Nani. She disdains to cast even a glance in his direction. The Balls make little jokes about Nani's persistent suitor to tease her. They call him the Undertaker's Assistant because of his solemn air and he is dressed entirely in funeral black. Though the young lady ignores him, he persists, the hope ever stirring in his heart that some day Nani will favor him with a smile.

There will be a new red-haired policeman on the beat over in Salinas in a few weeks. He is an auburn-haired Doberman Pinscher named Fellow. Right now he is just a rookie at training school. Mr. Fleming, the dog trainer, is teaching him the fine points of sleuthing, such as trailing, etc., etc. Fellow says that he hopes it will be exciting work. The crime situation will be pretty much in hand with Officer Fellow in charge.

A number of the local swains were very much disappointed that Jack Oakie didn't have his champion Afghan hound Dolly with him when he paid Carmel a visit the other day. It seems that they had heard that Dolly was quite a glamor girl with lots of "umph." She has traveled all over the country collecting blue ribbons and shattering hearts.

Cheer up, boys, maybe Mr. Oakie will bring her up here for the Del Monte Kennel Club show this summer.

Shorty Briner's early life sounds like an old-fashioned melodrama. He lived on a farm that was owned by his cruel master. Shorty used to help his master gather the eggs every day. Unfortunately he developed a great fondness for eggs himself and used to sneak one every now and then and eat it. His cruel master used to beat him every time he found that Shorty had eaten one of the eggs. It got so that Shorty used to cringe every time someone made a gesture in his direction. Finally his master decided to shoot him. True to the tradition of the melodrama he was rescued at this crucial moment by a kind lady, Mrs. Monica Briner, and adopted as a pet for the children.

Shorty has been with the Briners for two years, now, and he has become a new person. No longer does he cringe but holds his head high and carries himself proudly.

And his eyes are no longer haunted but are filled with loyalty and devotion.

Women Voters Hear Stirring Talk On Migratory Workers in California

There seem to me to be occasions when no amount of faithful reporting of a public utterance can manage to convey to readers an illusive something which the force and personality of the speaker has been able to give to an audience. That is, of course, because I am not a good reporter. Fortunately, THE CYMBAL is willing (or forced) at such times, to permit its representative to go outside the customary reportorial conventions and give the picture as she has received it.

An occasion like this presented itself the other day when Mrs. James Boyle, attorney, and referee of the Los Angeles Juvenile Court, spoke to the League of Women Voters and its guests on the subject, "A Coordinated Concept of Child Welfare in California."

The League of Women Voters, both as a national and a local organization, has been for a long time concerned with the problems not only of the delinquent child, but of all children so unfortunate as to be inadequately nourished, bodily and spiritually, in their own homes. Wherever the health and general welfare of the child need protection from his state the League is at work in his interest. Locally, a series of meetings has been held, over a period of three months, to study the California laws in their special application to local problems and practices. And while the League is not, by its nature, prepared to deal with individual or purely community cases, its program of study and its effective lobby work are busy trying to make adequate and effective the patronage of the State, than which there is no better patron in the failure of the parent.

The California State Juvenile Court Law is felt by the League to be a good one, its fault lying in the inequalities and imperfections due to the fact that its administration is left entirely with individual counties. Mrs. Boyle gave her audience the other day a fine sketch of the national situation and in taking up here Mrs. Boyle's contribution to the subject, we switch now to the field of Child Labor, on which situation, necessarily, a large part of the delinquency problem hinges.

There is the usual friction and muddling in trying to get national legislation on a subject like this into any shape at all. Eight states are needed to complete ratification of the bill as it stands now. But as it stands now there are elements unacceptable to right-thinking people—that is, to such people as make up the membership of organizations like the League. The Vandenberg Amendment to the bill, for instance, is opposed by the League for cogent reasons, one of these being that it makes no provisions for labor conditions of children over sixteen—eighteen being the League's favored age-limit; also, it applies only to children working for hire; and again, it pertains only in interstate commerce. The Barkley Bill, which directly forbids shipment of goods in interstate commerce meets with more approval. The Wheeler-Johnson Bill, with its many complications, is felt to be impracticable. At the present time, the Black-Connery, or Fair Labor Standards, Bill is in particular favor. This legislation would leave a good deal of discretion to the Children's Bureau, whose standards are high; it has clauses dealing with specific problems in factory work for children and is generally elastic and specific in the right places.

Mrs. Boyle recommended especial study of the Street Trades law, holding it to be an obvious injustice to allow children under ten to work.

Now, as I said, these statements in themselves do not allow for the subtle between-the-lines feeling we got the other day of the confusion, of the forces of selfish interest behind the vigilant efforts of disinterested men and women to attain some measure of justice in these matters nor do they convey at all that feeling of rapport between audience and speaker which it was Mrs. Boyle's special gift to create and which does more to convince than any other thing.

Now we come to migratory labor, where the figures themselves stand up on their hind legs and howl. There are, in California, over a quarter of a million migratory workers. From June, 1935, to March, 1937, 74,000 men and women with out-of-state licenses entered California looking for work in the fields and orchards. In a study of a cross-section of these people, it was determined that the average number in a family was 4.5 persons; their average annual income, $360.

One-third of the large farms of America are in California, yet 57 per cent of California's agricultural workers own no land. The problem—the situation itself—is not a new one here. When California shifted from an area of extensive farming to a group of large, specialized intensive farms—to big business in agriculture—the migratory labor problem followed naturally.

This natural phenomenon has been aggravated of course by the flight of populations from the drought areas and by the influx of cotton pickers for this comparatively new California crop.

Now, Mrs. Boyle says the migratory laborer wants to work. On relief he could get more money; the SRA budget is $775 a year, more than twice his average income in the fields. Almost 50 per cent are native white. They come, many of them, lately and terribly reduced in circumstances, to try to wrest a decent living from the land; the only way they know how to live, by farming. They make almost inhuman efforts to maintain respectable standards of living. So far, Mrs. Boyle says, many have succeeded in face of all the obstacles.

But right here, the child comes in again. Mrs. Boyle didn't say this, but I think it the logical fill-in and I'm sure she will not mind if I put it into words. These people live crowded together in tents or shacks; improper housing, inadequate sanitation. All kinds are mixed up together. The parents are in the fields during the day; schools are terribly insufficient and inefficient; every aspect of life is discontinuous, disintegrating. It is possible for grown-ups, bedded stoutly in their settled mores to maintain even thus, some dignity, some imperviousness to fate. But what of the children?

Now, there are certain things we can do about this and what we can we obviously should. Mrs. Boyle's specific recommendations included: furthering appropriations for the Bureau of Immigration and Housing; pushing state and federal co-operation on a question that transcends the state's power to cope with it; becoming sufficiently informed to get a basis of knowledge on which to rationalize the flow of labor; building for better machinery between laborer and employer; multiply travelling schools and insistence on strict enforcement of school laws; laboring tirelessly to inform and consolidate public opinion.

Only 11 per cent of these children are getting enough milk to drink. Twenty-seven per cent of them are suffering from nutritional defects and this percentage is on the increase. They sleep on boards and sometimes on the ground.

In its organizational function as student of our problems and as power behind the legislative thrones, groups like the League can work great and lasting good.

Mrs. Boyle managed to make her hearers understand, however, a much more basic fact. That for each one of us the obligation to do something about this problem is a personal responsibility owing to each respecting person as his portion in democratic governance.

Bardarson Gives Teachers' Convention Report Favoring Income and Sales Tax

O. W. Bardarson, Sunset School district superintendent, has returned from San Francisco where he attended the two-day meeting of the State Council of the California Teachers' Association at the Palace Hotel Friday and Saturday of last week.

On Friday there was an educational conference based on the topic, "Democracy and Youth" which consisted of discussions of the many problems in the country and the question of adjusting children of today to meet these existing conditions. Dr. John A. Sexson, superintendent of schools in Pasadena and president of the Teachers' Association, took the leading part. James A. Johnston, warden of Alcatraz, gave a talk in which he brought out the fact that in his study and investigation in the lives of criminals he found that criminal tendencies are developed in the individual by the age of 14 and by the age of 21 he is in the usual course of events a hardened criminal. He stressed the importance of teachers trying to detect tendencies of that nature as early as possible and working to counteract the influences and future developments. Although much valuable work is being done by teachers in this matter the large classes and heavy work required by individual members of school faculties make it difficult.

Hilda Kessler, student at the University of California, gave a talk stressing the point that schools must provide a living and dynamic program and must provide the type of education that acquaints children with present-day economic conditions and proposed improvements of the world in which they are living.

Kenneth Beam, State Department of Education, discussed the necessity of co-ordinating the efforts and place. Both men and women are welcome.

PISTOL CLUB

Carmel Pistol Club meets every second Tuesday in month at new range in basement of Carmel Garage.

of all the various phases of youth welfare, such as Red Cross, P.T.A., schools, police department, etc., and thus eliminating much duplicate work of different organizations and increasing the effectiveness of the help given each case. He also discussed the importance of creating the right home surroundings for the child, the significance of the broken home and other allied topics.

On Saturday a business meeting was held at which various committees gave their reports. Bardarson, chairman, presented the report of the Committee on Financing Public Education in California, which went on record as strongly favoring both income and sales taxes and recommended that the public become better acquainted with the purpose of the sales tax which is only partly utilized for the schools. The committee also recommended that kindergarten attendance be admitted on the elementary school basis in order to obtain state financial aid for the kindergarten which is now entirely supported by the school district. The committee is hoping to accomplish the increase of the current state contribution to elementary schools in order that the present heavy teaching loads in large classes may be relieved. It is also in favor of the principle of federal support of public education based on the needs of certain states where education facilities are limited.

Camera Club To 'Shoot' Brewery

Field Day at a Brewery is something one may look forward to if he joins up with the Camera Club. April 24 is the day when members take up cameras and pile through the Monterey Brewery at Salinas, beginning at 11 in the forenoon. The purpose is to take pictures of anything which appeals to the photographer. There is little doubt that there will be a good turnout.

Later, we may see some of the shots in the Exhibition of Members' Work which will be shown at Pine Inn around July 15. The club has done consistently good work and the exhibition is looked forward to with much interest. Members will show photographs on any subject. Of course, we shall expect to see the winning prints from each month's chosen subject.

The camera subject for the following month, prints to be submitted at the next meeting, May 9, will be portraits. The last one was roofs. Out of 30 prints submitted, Al Sparks took the prize.

Tuesday night, at the annual meeting for election of officers, Peter Stuart Burk was elected president and Lloyd Weer, secretary-treasurer.

'Crucifixion' To Be Given Tonight

Rehearsals for "The Crucifixion" are over, and the director, Fenton P. Foster, feels that the chorus of 65 voices has prepared the music of this oratorio very well indeed. The orchestra is well up in performing the accompaniments, in great measure due to the co-operation of Mr. Frank A. Young, musical director of Monterey Union High School, and, of course, Mrs. Carol Moore Turner, the organist and accompanist, leaves nothing to be desired in her department.

The oratorio is short, and will be preceded by "Open the Gates of the Temple," by Mrs. Jos. F. Knapp, and sung by Mr. Bert Fallows, baritone; "Hosanna," by Jules Grenier, sung by Mrs. Paul L. Hicks, soprano; and "There Is a Green Hill," Gounod, sung by the Rev. Homer S. Bodley, Jr. In addition to the foregoing, other solo parts in the oratorio will be sung by Mrs. Charles W. Easterbrook, contralto, and Mr. William E. Gould, bass.

Lovers of beautiful sacred music will not want to miss this touching and highly appropriate composition, which will be given in Methodist Church, Pacific Grove, on Good Friday night, April 15, at 8 o'clock. There will be no admission fee, but a silver offering will be accepted for charitable purposes and to help defray the concert expenses.

Public Invited To Nursery Tea Parties

It has seemed advisable to postpone the adult education discussion groups of the Peninsula Mothers' Association until Fall, but Mrs. Millard Klein is opening the Nursery School's monthly tea and discussion group to the public. Any one who is interested in discussions of child problems is welcome to come. The first of these teas falls on Wednesday, April 27, and will be held at the Nursery School at 2:30 p.m.

There is now a waiting list at the Nursery School, which is a matter of first come, first served. A deposit of $2 must be made to put a child on this list. The Nursery School was set up by the Mothers' Association, but in six months' time, they expect to pay every cent back, so that by Fall, the school will carry its own expenses and will have its own school board. It is an average priced institution, but well able to be on its own soon.

Del Monte Plans Easter Dance

Quiet comes to Del Monte on Easter—but not on Easter Eve. The parade of socialites from San Francisco and Los Angeles arriving today and tomorrow will be greeted by a dinner dance tomorrow night in the Bali room.

When the notes of "The Easter Parade" break forth from Freddie Nagel's orchestra, the established theme of the evening will be embellished with Easter decorations and special entertainment.

Prior to the Sunday morning Easter egg hunt, Del Monte anticipates another hunt—a peninsula-wide hunt for the Bali room, where home-townners will join out-of-townners in the fun of the night before Easter.

Abalone Players Demons for Runs

In two baseball games on the third Sunday of their 1938 season, the Abalone League managed to send batters to the plate for a total of 159 times, and those batters made an aggregate of 79 hits and scored a conglomeration of 72 runs. In the matter of figures, that's considerable for one day's work, or play, on the Abalone Field on the Mission Tract.

In the first game the Giants landed hard on the Pilots and ended up with 19 runs to their credit while the lowly ones garnered only 7.

In the second game the going for the Shamrocks was a bit tougher, but they managed to work out to a 15-to-11 victory over the Tigers.

As the standing is now the Giants and Shamrocks have each won two and lost one, while the Tigers and Pilots have one each to their credit and each have dropped two.
